Low Carbon Food Chain – Quo Vadis?

Low Carbon Food Chains – Quo Vadis?

- » What protocols exist to measure the climate impact of food products?
- » What approaches and criteria are developed and implemented to reduce the climate impact of food chains?
- » What developments can we expect in the short to medium term?
- » What systems are implemented to help businesses in the food chain to measure and reduce GHG emissions?

Much of the carbon footprinting debates evolve around agriculture and food products. Significant efforts are undertaken to better measure and tackle emissions from food and agricultural products. In the one-day dialogue forum on 18 May 2011 in Berlin initiatives and practitioners from the food chain will present and discuss status, approaches and prospects for promoting low carbon food chains.

Presentations or updates on the following initiatives are currently foreseen at the dialogue forum:

- » European Food Sustainable Consumption and Production Round Table
- » The Horticulture Sector Protocol, Netherlands
- » French Environmental Labelling Scheme, France
- » The Swedish Climate Certification Scheme, Sweden
- » EU Eco Label
- » Sustainability Consortium, USA

Number of participants limited. Early registration recommended.

About the PCF World Forum

Consumption of goods and services indirectly contributes to a large share of worldwide GHG emissions. Solutions are needed to help companies manage and communicate the impact of their products on the climate and general environment. They are also needed to provide consumers with information on a product's climate impact to help them make climate-conscious consumption decisions.

The Product Carbon Footprint (PCF) World Forum is a neutral platform to share practical experiences and knowledge towards climate-conscious consumption and production. The international platform provides orientation in current standardisation processes and creates opportunities for discussing international corporate best practices and emerging tools to support low carbon and climate-conscious consumption models.

The PCF World Forum was created out of the ambition to talk with each other and not just about each other given the ever increasing number of initiatives around the world and often little real understanding of respective approaches and activities.

Over the past years representatives from a range of organisations and initiatives have come together at the PCF World Summits, PCF World Forum Update Workshops and dedicated Dialogue Fora Low Carbon Society to give insights into their own work, discuss and interpret current developments and explore possible common pathways.

The PCF World Summits have stimulated several working groups such as the current Task Force on international harmonisation of Product Category Rules and concrete cooperations among participants.
